Political Insider Trading — Mitigating a Risk

The Hedge Fund Journal

May 2020

The allegation that some U.S. senators selling equities in February 2020 might have taken advantage of political intelligence around the coronavirus pandemic crisis has highlighted a risk for hedge fund managers — political insider trading. In this article, partner Craig Warkol discusses how to mitigate the risks of insider trading when using political consultants and provides his insights as a former federal prosecutor and SEC enforcement attorney.
