Maximizes the value of intellectual property and protects clients' key technological differentiators.

Tim counsels clients on all aspects of technology disputes and intellectual property investments, from patent litigation and trade secret matters to licensing negotiations and portfolio-level strategies.

Leveraging his science background, he regularly advises on a wide range of technologies and industries, including biotechnology, chemistry, electrical engineering, networking, energy, medical devices and consumer electronics.

Whether representing Fortune 500 companies, disruptive pioneers or even individual inventors, Tim prides himself on understanding his clients commercial and economic goals – be they monetization, technological differentiation or market share maximization – and crafting the optimal strategy to achieve those goals.

Tim's experience spans all aspects of US patent litigation from district courts to the Federal Circuit and the Supreme Court, includes robust experience before administrative agencies such as the US Patent & Trademark Office and the International Trade Commission, and involves implementing global strategies through international arbitration and by overseeing counterpart proceedings around the world.
