A General Counsel's Guide to Preparing for Coronavirus Investigations

Bloomberg Law

May 2020

Businesses of all sizes are grappling with a variety of issues related to the coronavirus crisis: the employment, cybersecurity and privacy concerns stemming from remote workforces; whether to apply for federal funds to resume operations when communities reopen; and how to adapt to such profound change and significant uncertainty about the future. In this article, partner Douglas Koff, associate Noah Gillespie and former Schulte lawyers Barry Bohrer and Adam Hoffinger outline procedures general counsel should follow in preparation for potential regulatory and criminal investigations that may arise due to the COVID-19 pandemic.
